PREFACE

TO THE SEVENTY-NINTH VOLUME.

1865-'6.

In the Preface to the Directory of 1861, the first year of the Rebellion, we ventured to make the prediction, in opposition to the common belief that grass would be growing in Broadway if the Cotton States seceded, that, however long the war might last, New York would continue to increase in spite of it. Our prediction has been singularly verified. Every year since the outbreak of the Rebellion the list of names in the Directory has exhibited a small increase of population, smaller in appearance than the reality would have justified. But, the existence of the war and the constantly impending danger of a draft was a sufficient reason for a large number of persons to try by all the efforts in their power to keep their names out of the Directory. This year no such motives exert any influence, and the Directory contains thirteen thousand five hundred and ninety-two more names than it did last year, so that it will better serve the purpose for which it is intended than it has been in the power of the publisher to make it the last four years. The entire number of names in the Directory for 1865–'6 is 166,144. This large increase of names necessarily causes a considerable increase in the size of the work and adds to the cost of its production; but the price will remain the same as last year.

No expense nor pains have been spared to render the Directory perfect; a well-arranged system for collecting the names, the result of many years' experience, and the assistance of a corps of canvassers whose labors from year to year have greatly facilitated the labor of compilation, have enabled the publisher to present the work in a better form and at a cheaper rate than could be done by any new beginner.

A good many sharp criticisms have been bestowed upon the work by the press, for which the publisher is much more grateful than he would have been for undeserved puffs. He hopes that there will be no intermission of these favors, and he has, in fact, made special arrangements for them. The ordinary "first-rate notices" which newspapers so freely bestow upon new books would evidently be thrown away upon a work like the Directory, whose merit nobody takes upon trust, and which nobody buys for any other reason than that he cannot afford to do without it. But the criticisms of the press are not the only ones the Directory is favored with; a good many letters are sent to the publisher of which the following will serve as a sample:

"SIR: I don't find the name of the Third Unitarian Church in 40th Street in your Directory. There are also many similar omissions of societies and their officers. Yours, A. B."

We do not doubt that A. B. did not find what he was looking for, for the same reason that many others fail to find what they want: he did not look in the right place. If he had, he would have been more successful. Possibly, like many others, he did not look in the right Directory; he may have looked in the Directory of 1863, which was published before the church in question was built. If he had looked in last year's Directory he would have found it there in the proper place and under the proper head. These cases of groundless fault-finding are not mentioned to deprecate criticism. All defects that may be discovered in the Directory the publisher will be happy to be made acquainted with; and all suggestions for the improvement of the work will be respectfully considered.

It is hardly proper to institute comparisons between the New York Directory and the London Directory, as we have often seen done, as the two works are so essentially dissimilar. The habits of the two cities are so unlike that no similarity could exist. The ends arrived at in the two publications are very different. Here we aim at giving a complete list every year of every house-keeper and man of business in the city, while there the Directory is not published annually, and the names of but a small part of the population are given. The true way of testing the merits of the New York City Directory is to compare it with the Directories of Boston and Philadelphia, though in neither of these cities does the habit of yearly removals, which prevails in New York, render the compilation of the work half so complicated and costly as it is here.

The publisher confidently presents the work to the public the present year, feeling sure that if it is not altogether perfect, it is as nearly so as industry and good intentions can render it.
